Attention deficit in children is linked to exposure to phthalates in medical tubing

Owen Dyer

BMJ 2016;353:i2103

Phthalates, plasticising agents banned from children’s toys but still used in medical tubing to add flexibility, have been linked to the later development of attention deficit disorders in children admitted to hospital with serious illness, a study published in Intensive Care Medicine has shown.

[...]