Learning disorders in ADHD: How are they related?

Fourneret P, Poissant H.

Abstract

Learning difficulties in general and learning disabilities, in particular, are almost constant in attention deficit disorder with or without hyperactivity (ADHD). Despite a major research effort, the extent and diversity of these comorbid events still raise many questions about the exact nature of their pathogenetic condition (simple consequences of ADHD or specifically related disorders?) and consequently the best way to support them. This article aims to present a brief review of the current data.